A. CONTRIBUTORS & CONTENT

Ex-nazi De Flores, the infamous Lady Peinforte from 1638, and the Cybermen, are all intent on uniting the three components of the Silver Nemesis and thus gaining ultimate power. The Nemesis is made of validium, a destructive living metal from Gallifrey. De Flores has the bow and Lady Peinforte the arrow, but the largest component, the figure itself, was sent into orbit by the Doctor 350 years earlier. Now, in 1988, it returns to Earth - in Windsor. The rival forces gather to seize it.

A. CONTRIBUTORS & CONTENT

The Cybermen, who are vulnerable only to gold, wipe out De Flores' troops, and the Doctor takes the bow without De Flores realising it. The Cybermen move the statue to Lady Peinforte's tomb and wait for the other parties to follow. Thinking he still has the bow, De Flores makes a pact with the Cybermen, intending to doublecross them once he has Lady Peinforte's arrow and the statue - but in the event, the Cybermen are one jump ahead. The Doctor discovers the vast fleet of Cyber warships, waiting to take over the Earth.

A. CONTRIBUTORS & CONTENT

The Doctor confronts the Cybermen in the tomb. With the proximity of the bow, the statue, already reunited with the arrow, comes to life and explodes out of the Crypt, following the Doctor and the bow back to a derelict hangar near the meteor's landing site. De Flores and his henchman, Karl, escape from the Cybermen. The rival forces assemble in the hangar for the final showdown in which the Doctor is, of course, victorious.
